Speaker Introduction

Perhaps the best way to describe John G. Self's career is "uniquely varied." He's worked in the newsrooms of three Texas daily newspapers, served as the first director of Hermann Hospital's acclaimed Life Flight program, run the largest private EMS system in Texas, and built two executive search firms. Throughout his career, which includes working on 4 continents and seven countries, Mr. Self has enjoyed the heights of success and rewards of a lifetime of meeting interesting people all over the world.

An awarding winning speaker who has donated countless hours to coaching executives and graduate students regarding career transitions and personal brand management, he was named in 2010 the senior healthcare leader of the year in North Texas by the American College of Healthcare Executives. He previously served two terms as President of ACHE of North Texas, one of the largest chapters of healthcare leaders in the nation. He is a graduate of East Texas State University – now part of the famed Texas A&M system. He holds a degree in Journalism and in 2012 was recognized as a distinguished journalism graduate.

While Mr. Self will be the first to admit that he has not seen it all, he has enjoyed a fascinating career and amassed a treasure trove of interesting stories and keen insights.

Today he serves as President of JohnGSelf Associates, an executive search firm recognized for innovation and exceptional client service.

He is married. He and his wife March have four children and two grandchildren.
